Frequently Asked Questions

What is an accessory apartment?

An accessory apartment (also referred to as an in-law apartment) can be created or remodeled from a space you already have in your home. An apartment can also be created in a separate structure, in a barn, or over a garage.

What are the benefits of having an accessory apartment?

- Provides rental income to help pay the mortgage.
- Adds value to your home and offers tax benefits.
- Creates housing options, including the ability to live in the accessory apartment yourself with children or grandchildren in the main house.
- Gives homeowners the option to barter reduced rents for help such as shoveling walks and running errands. This arrangement often allows seniors to stay in their homes.
- Tenants provide additional security for seniors and those who travel frequently.
- Supports the community by providing affordable housing to those who are looking for a place to live close to where they work, such as teachers and healthcare workers.

Will I like being a landlord?

Renting an apartment in your home comes with many responsibilities and can have many rewards. Finding good tenants will make these responsibilities easier and increase the rewards. In this guide we explain the process for screening tenants and provide reference materials that explain a landlord's role in more detail.

If you would like to speak with people who have built and rented an apartment in their homes, we have a list of contacts you can call to talk about their experiences.

What do I do next?

Step 1: Contact us!

Contact Jocelyn Ayer at 413.229.0370 x105 or jayer@housingus.org. She will explain our program in more detail, answer your questions, and discuss your level of interest.

Step 2: Schedule a home visit and consultation by our team—at no charge

Our coordinator will work with you to schedule a visit by our local Accessory Apartments volunteers. During this visit we can look at the space you propose to use as an apartment and provide feedback and suggestions. We will help estimate the costs of construction and identify potential problems. We will find out exactly where you'd like our assistance and let you know the next steps.

Step 3: Get a cost estimate

If needed, after the home visit, we can set up a meeting with an experienced builder to give you a rough cost estimate for creating the apartment.

What will the costs be?

Four major categories of costs may be associated with your project: SOFT COSTS such as the costs of an architect or soil testing for septic capacity.

CONSTRUCTION COSTS These include the costs for building materials and labor and will vary depending on the amount of work involved. A minor renovation could be fairly inexpensive. An Accessory Apartments program in Brattleboro, VT reports that costs typically range from $2,500 to $40,000 depending on the amount of work involved.

PERMITTING FEES Zoning and building permits average about $300, depending on the value of the proposed construction work. See Step 6 for more details on these permits.

TAXES AND INSURANCE Having an apartment may increase your insurance costs. You should check with your insurance agent. Your property tax may increase if your town decides that the apartment has substantially increased the property's value. And the income you get from the apartment is taxable. However, the apartment's share of the cost of owning and operating the property is deductible from your income (e.g. its share of insurance cost, property tax, fuel, repairs, etc.).

Will the rent cover these expenses?

In most cases your rental income can repay the costs of construction in two to five years. To help you think about whether it will be worthwhile to create an apartment we can provide you with a budget worksheet (see Appendix C available online). You can use it to estimate the apartment's income and operating costs and see what your net income is likely to be.

Step 4: Find architectural design assistance

Apartments can be created or remodeled from space you already have. This could be on the first or second floor of your house, in a walk-out basement, or in a garage or barn. You can also create a new apartment by adding on to your house or building a freestanding structure.

Sometimes an owner is able to sketch a good plan for the apartment with which we can get a rough preliminary cost estimate. If design help is needed, we may be able to help arrange for it.

Keep in mind that Kent's Planning and Zoning commission may have design related regulations such as requiring a fire escape to be located to the side or rear of the home. For your town's zoning requirements, see Appendix B. The Land Use Administrator listed in Appendix A can provide additional information on these regulations.

Step 5: Choose a contractor

It is often wise to hire a general contractor to oversee the project and supervise (or "subcontract") carpentry, plumbing, electric, etc., unless you have experience with such projects.

Reputation is the best guide in choosing a general contractor. As good contractors are often booked months in advance, you should start looking early – as soon as you have even a rough idea of the project.

Talk with other people in the area who've had similar work done. Was the contractor competent? Did they have useful ideas? Did they hire good sub-contractors? Did the work keep moving and get done roughly when they'd said? Was the cost close to or less than their estimate? Were they easy to work with?

We can provide you with suggestions for general contractors, electricians, plumbers, septic engineers and others who we believe to be competent and reliable.

Call at least two of the contractors and explain your project. Ask if they have experience with your type of project and when they could begin work. Ask the contractor for references from two or three homeowners for whom they've recently completed work. Call the references and ask about their experience with the contractor, including whether they would hire her/him again. If possible, arrange to look at a contractor's prior work.

Step 6: Get zoning and building permits

Zoning Permit Steps

See Appendix B for an outline of the regulatory requirements for an accessory apartment and the application process.

You can obtain the necessary permit application in the land use office of town hall and discuss the process and requirements with the land use administrator. We can help you prepare and file a zoning permit application.

If your property is served by a private septic system and/or well, you must receive Torrington Area Health District (TAHD) approval BEFORE you receive zoning approval. See Appendix B for details.

Building Permit Steps

After you get your zoning permit (and septic approval, if necessary) you will need a building permit to start construction.

When applying to the Building Department you must submit the following:

- two sets of plans
- a building permit application
- proof of insurance (if you are a contractor); if you are not a contractor you must fill out an affidavit
- permit fee

The current fee for a building permit is based on the estimated value of the work being done. It is $20 for the first $1,000 and $6 for each additional $1,000 of estimated value. For example, if you are building an apartment that costs $15,000, your building permit fee will be $104.

Once you have submitted the building permit application materials, the Building Department will have up to 30 days to review and approve them. Once a building permit is issued, you may start construction.

Step 7: Obtain financing

Salisbury Bank & Trust Company and National Iron Bank offer special programs and rates for homeowners who are creating an accessory apartment. Call your representative at these banks or contact us for current bank contact information. Other local banks may offer such programs as well.

Step 8: Find a tenant

Being a Landlord

If things go well – and they generally do – you’ll have a problem-free, hopefully enjoyable, relationship with your tenant. The clearer you both are about your rights and responsibilities, the happier things will be. There is an excellent book, published by Fannie Mae, called Becoming a Landlord. For a copy call 800.752.2000.

In case you’re unclear about the law or a problem develops during your first year as a landlord, we provide a hotline to a professional property manager. Just call us.

Tenant Selection

People who have an apartment in the home they live in are free to rent, or not rent, to whomever they choose.

Before accepting inquiries you should consider what you are looking for in a tenant. Being clear about what you want may influence how you go about looking for the right person. If the apartment is on your second floor, for example, noise may be more of a concern than if it is over a detached garage.

There are many ways to go about finding a good tenant: word of mouth, flyers or bulletin boards, newspaper ads, etc. Whatever method you choose, be sure to screen applicants carefully before you offer a lease.

How do I screen a possible tenant?

When you first talk with a prospect be sure they understand what you’re offering – are there laundry facilities, will you allow pets, etc. – as well as what the rent will be and whether it includes utilities.

If a person seems like a good prospect, ask them to complete an application (for a sample application see Appendix D). Then:

- I. Call the people listed as references on the application and ask them for information about your applicant. Be sure to ask whether they would rent to (in the case of a former landlord) or hire (if an employer) the person again.

2. Ask previous landlords whether the applicant paid their rent on time.
3. Do a background check that will tell you whether an applicant has a criminal record or civil violations. It's much better to do this before renting to someone than to learn about their history later. You will need to have the applicant sign an authorization for the background check. We can help you do the background check.

Rental Agreement

For your protection and your tenant's, there should be a written rental agreement or lease. (See Appendix E)

Bookkeeping and Reports

For tax purposes, and so that you'll know how your investment in the apartment is working out, you should keep careful track of rental income and expenses. Expenses you need to keep track of are all those that are attributable partly or entirely to the apartment. Usually they will be the expenses listed on our budget worksheet.

All landlords are required to file IRS Schedule E with their tax return. Part I is probably the only part you'll need to complete. If you've kept good track of all the expenses that are on our budget worksheet, you should have no trouble with Schedule E.

Step 9: Call on us for support!

You can call on us for assistance with anything that comes up in the first year of being a landlord. We provide a hotline to a professional property manager if any problems arise or if you have a question about your responsibilities. We look forward to working with you to create an accessory apartment!

Appendix B: Summary of Zoning Regulations and Application Process for Accessory Apartments in Kent, CT

Zoning Regulations

FOR ATTACHED ACCESSORY APARTMENTS

Under the Town of Kent's Zoning Regulations you may create an accessory apartment that is in your home or attached to your home in any residential zoning district in town. Your home would then be considered a "two-family dwelling" for zoning purposes. Therefore, you have to apply for a zoning permit for a change of use from a "one-family dwelling" to a "two-family dwelling". This is not a difficult process.

FOR DETACHED ACCESSORY APARTMENTS

You may create a detached accessory apartment in a separate structure (such as a detached barn or garage) only if you are in the RU zoning district. Note: this district covers a large percentage of the town. If you are not sure which zoning district you are located in, ask the Land Use Administrator. You will need a special permit and site plan approval to do this.

AREA & YARD REQUIREMENTS

If you are expanding the footprint of your home with the addition of the accessory apartment, you must meet the area and yard requirements for the zoning district that you are in. For example, if you are creating an attached accessory apartment in the RU zone, your front yard must be 40ft, your side yards must be 30ft, and your rear yard must be 30ft. If you are not sure what these requirements are for the zoning district where you live, ask the Town Land Use Administrator.

Application Process

STEP 1: Pick up the necessary permit application(s) in the land use office of town hall or get them on the Town's website: kentct.org

For attached accessory apartments you will need the Residential Zoning permit. For detached accessory apartments you will need a Special Permit Application and a Site Plan Application.

If you have any questions about these forms or what you will need to submit with them, ask the Land Use Administrator.

STEP 2: Submit completed applications and fees.

For attached accessory units: Fees are based on the estimated cost of the work being done: If the cost of the work is less than $2,000, the fee will be $110. If the cost of the work is more than $2,000, the fee will be 1% of the total estimated cost of the work being done.

For detached accessory apartments: The special permit application fee is $210 and the Site Plan application fee is $160. NOTE: You may apply for the special permit first or apply for both a special permit and site plan approval at the same time. The special permit will require a public hearing for the Planning & Zoning Commission to review your application. You or your representative should be present.

STEP 3: Attend the Planning & Zoning Commission meeting when your application will be considered.

This process can take between one and three months from the time you submit a completed application. Applications for a special permit will take longer (usually in the three month range) and require a public hearing.

Septic System Requirements

If your property is served by a private septic system, you must receive Torrington Area Health District (TAHD) approval BEFORE you receive zoning approval. Contact information for Kent's official is listed in Appendix A.

You may be required to build a new or expanded septic system to accommodate the increased number of bedrooms served by your existing septic system. This will depend on the number of bedrooms you are adding and the age of your septic system. The regulations that govern this are complicated. But in general, if you don't add 50% OR MORE of the total number of bedrooms in your home and the apartment is ATTACHED, you may be able to avoid having to add a new septic system for an accessory apartment.

For example: If you have a 3 bedroom home, you may be able to add an attached one bedroom accessory apartment (within the existing structure or in an attached garage) without having to build a new septic system.

Q & A: When will a new septic system be required?

Q: If the homeowner is renovating space within an existing dwelling to add an apartment by converting existing bedrooms and not adding new ones will they need to add septic capacity?

A: You will probably not need to add septic capacity if the apartment is within the existing residence, and you are not increasing the number of bedrooms in the home.

Q: If the homeowner is turning an existing structure such as a garage or barn into a one bedroom apartment will they need to add septic capacity?

A: If the garage or barn is ATTACHED to the home, even with a breezeway, you may only have to add septic capacity if you are adding 50% or more of the number of bedrooms in the existing residence.

However, if the garage or barn is DETACHED, you will need to add a separate septic system and reserve area for the accessory apartment UNLESS you are only adding a one bedroom apartment, then you may be able to connect to the existing septic system. However this will require State Health Department review and approval.

For more information, we can provide you with a copy of the Frequently Asked Questions handout on septic system requirements and approval process for Accessory Apartments.
